Because CPF has a collective bargaining relationship with Local 99 of the International Union of Operating Engineers covering one of its employees (the building engineer), CPF could properly be categorized as an employer whose employees the IUOE represents—i.e., an employer payments from which should be reported in Section A of this report. If CPF is considered a Section A employer, her salary would be exempt from reporting in that Section since it would be covered by the exemption for “payments...received as a bona fide employee of the employer for past or present services, including wages...” However, the Department of Labor’s guidance, published June 23, 2005, has indicated that a trust fund which receives employer contributions pursuant to collective bargaining agreements negotiated by the union is the type of entity considered a “business” such that payments from such an entity (without the exemption for wages earned as a bona fide employee) must be reported in Section B of the LM-30. Since the CPF receives contributions from employers pursuant to collective bargaining agreements negotiated with numerous IUOE Local Unions, it appears to meet these criteria for a “business.” Under these somewhat confusing circumstances, out of an excess of caution, and in a good faith attempt to report appropriately, the filer is reporting his spouse’s income from CPF in Section B.
